However, old photos may also gather dirt and develop stains. Luckily, with the right supplies, you can easily clean and restore old photos. It's important to make digital copies first, as there's always a risk of damage when cleaning photos. To clean old photos, start by laying the photograph on top of a towel on a clean, flat surface. Next, use a can of compressed air to blow away any dirt or dust from the photogragh. If the photo is particularly delicate, you can use a soft cleaning brush instead. Then, dry the photo with a hairdryer set on high heat, holding it 10 inches away from the picture to avoid heat damage. For tips on how to clean rare photographs, such as ambrotypes and daguerrotypes, read on! Did this summary help you? Things You'll Need. Related Articles. Article Summary. Method 1 of Scan digital images first. Before you begin the cleaning process, back up your photos digitally. While proper cleaning minimizes the risk of damage, it does not completely eliminate it. Scan your photos onto your computer and save them before attempting to clean them. Use supplies specifically made for cleaning photographs. As old photos are delicate, you should never use generic cleaning supplies on them. You should use photograph emulsion cleaner and wipes specifically made for cleaning photographs only. These items can sometimes be difficult to find in stores, but should be easy to purchase online. They resemble normal cleaning wipes and spray cleaners, but use less harsh ingredients. Do not substitute cleaners. While getting specialized supplies is a hassle, it's worth the extra cost to avoid damaging your photographs. Put on editing gloves. Before handling your photographs, put on a pair of clean editing gloves. Like other supplies for cleaning photographs, these can be purchased online. It's important to use editing gloves over generic gloves when cleaning photographs. Method 2 of Place the photograph on top of a towel. Lay a clean towel down over a flat surface. Place your photographs on the towel. Make sure to wear your editing gloves, even at the beginning of the process, to avoid damage. Brush off dirt. Use a can of compressed air. Blow the air over the photo to remove any stuck on dirt or dust. You can also use a soft cleaning brush, which may work better for very delicate photos. It's important you get any dust and dirt off before wiping down the photos. You do not want to get debris plastered onto the photos when wiping them down. Wipe off any lingering debris. Take your cleaning pads. Gently wipe down the surface of the photographs to remove any residue left on the photos. Use extremely slow hand movements to avoid tearing the photographs. Move the wipes over the photograph, removing any set-in debris and dirt as you go. You should always closely read the manufacturer's instructions before using a cleaning pad. Dry your photographs. Hold a hairdryer set on high heat about 10 inches away from your photo. Move the hair dryer back and forth slowly. This should dry the photo off. Keep moving the hair dryer back and forth until the photo is completely dry. Seek professional help for difficult stains. Some photographs may have very set in stains that do not respond to routine cleaning. You do not want to use harsh cleaners or clean your photographs too aggressively on your own. Look online to find professional photography cleaning services in your area in the event you're dealing with very difficult stains. It's better to spend extra money on professional services than risk damaging irreplaceable old photographs. Method 3 of Clean only the viewing glass of ambrotypes. Ambrotypes are old photos that often consist of two plates of glass. One plate contains the image while the other, the viewing glass, covers the image. Only clean the viewing glass and only do so if you know which is the viewing glass. The viewing glass should be cleaned with cotton swabs dipped in alcohol. Only do a light wipe down, to rub away any unwanted dirt and grime. Stay away from the corners and sides when cleaning, as you do not want any liquid to seep into the picture and harm the image. You can sometimes tell by examining the photo carefully. Photographers often used a black lacquer on one side of the glass to darken it. The image is found on the glass opposite the black lacquer. If you do not know for sure which side is the viewing glass, take your ambrotype to a professional. You can severely damage ambrotype pictures by cleaning the glass that contains the image. Do not clean daguerreotypes. Daguerreotypes are another antique form of photography from the 19th Century. Due to their extremely delicate nature, daguerreotypes should not be cleaned by amateur collectors. Always take daguerreotypes to a professional for cleaning. If you can't find one close by, see if you can find a professional you can work with long distance. Someone may be willing to mail your photos back and forth. Use compressed air on vintage cartes and cabinet cards. Vintage cartes and cabinet cards should never be cleaned with liquid. Blow a can of compressed air above these types of photos to remove dirt and debris. If dirt is not removed with compressed air, use a very soft brush to wipe it away using extremely delicate motions. In this case, seek professional cleaning services. Method 4 of Store your photographs in a dry environment. Once your old photographs are clean, store them in a protected area that is also dry. You can, for example, put them in an envelope and store them in a drawer in your home that is not prone to moisture or humidity. This should keep your photos in good shape after the cleaning process. You can check online to find companies in your area that provide specialized storage for old, valuable photographs. Remove new stains quickly. The quicker you clean out stains, the better. If you spill anything on an old photograph, or get dirt on it with your fingers, clean it promptly to prevent the stains from becoming set. Swish the photograph around to remove any stains. Minimize how often you handle old photographs. Handling old photographs infrequently will protect them from damage. Old photographs are fragile, so it's important not to over handle them. Only handle photographs when absolutely necessary, such as when you're moving. For the most part, keep them in storage to preserve them over time. This way, if you want to look at old photographs, you can do so on screen to avoid handling them. No, I wouldn't recommend using sanitizer as it might damage your photo. Not Helpful 1 Helpful 0. Photographer Larry Chen. I don't like his content, or his personality, and I know he's been involved in a ton of drama before but I have no clue what he's talking about in specific. With all my biases out of the way, I can't help but feel like this was an incredibly insincere apology. The way he talks is just off-putting and doesn't look right. But tbf, I don't think I've ever seen him be sincere on his youtube channel before so idk. Anybody think they will give this channel another shot? Personally I think he burned too many bridges and alienated too many people over the past several years not just this year as he suggested. Who cares? All of these rich kid clickbait Youtube channels are the same. Whether it's VV or someone else, there's plenty of this type of content out there if that is your thing. This is a total yawn-fest. You know why these apology videos always cut to a different scene after the person says they are sorry? Because they've edited out the completely disingenuous expression on their face. Maybe he's genuine, maybe he's not. In this case the guy has been known as an entitled douche bag for years, so even if you take him at his word and "explain away" this year's behavior, he is still pretty unlikeable. In today's climate you aren't allowed to question someone if they blame anxiety or depression. But if someone acts like a jerk for years, and then REALLY acts like a jerk for one year, is mental health really to blame, or did it just exacerbate what was already there? Its an easy out to attempt to sweep wrongs under the rug. I didnt respect this guy anyway, but if an apology contains anything regarding this anymore on youtube i just assume its just an easy way out from fuck ups. Like him not paying back Rob Dahm when he destroyed his hood on his RX-7, is anyone gonna belive the reason he didnt pay him back was because he was depressed? Cmon dude, give me a break, this guy is such a fucking tool. Hope this "comeback" does nothing for him, just dissapear again please. Agreed especially since in this case he was like it way before he says getting off his meds and the drugs started. I don't know anything about these people, but knowing a fair bit about mental health, depression isn't a reason not to pay someone back. This guy needs to learn to be an adult and take actual responsibility if he did something like that, by apologizing and paying the other guy back with interest, and NOT making a video about that. Doing it privately would show genuine maturity. That's apparently a tall order for this boy a man would take responsibility. I left my 2 cents on his video. Going to copy paste it here because anything I would type would be roughly the same gist: It's funny you say you were toxic in I used to follow you. Your toxic behavior didn't start in It started years before that. When you screwed your partner over, Rob Dahm over and continued to act like the hot doo doo you think you are. You are part of the D squad of automotive creators on this platform. I could list the others, but I am going to refrain from that since this isn't about them. It's about you. I am not going to dispute mental issues, or speak ill about that. It is real and I suffer from some of that stuff myself. But to just come out and blame it on is a punk move. If you and the people reading this comment are objective the toxic stuff has been going on for a very long time. I doubt you will ever find your old self at this stage. You lost it the moment your subscriber number went to your head. Good luck Parker. I hope you get in a good mental space so you can be honest with yourself and your subscribers. While neither one was entertaining on their own, atleast between the two of them there was this enthusiastic nerdiness that was kinda fun to watch. I remember meeting this guy at a big car event in the Detroit area a handful of years ago. He seemed nice enough at the time and wanted to chat. But it appears he and his channel changed drastically when he left Michigan. It started with him burning bridges with Eddie and I never followed his channel since. I don't feel sorry for him. Money helps, but losing your mental clarity, friends, and network is a shattering experience for any human, rich or poor. What a bull crap to gain viewers.

A YouTube video shows what happens when a motorist refuses to hand over his documents to a police officer in a Texas traffic stop. On May 2, an officer with the Addison Police Department stopped year-old Scott Richardson for driving 50 mph in a 40 mph zone. After Richardson's repeated refusal to show identification, the officer opened a baton, smashed Richardson's mostly-raised driver-side window, opened the door, removed Richardson and arrested him. The exchange leading up to the window smash appears typical of encounters between law enforcement and so-called "sovereign citizens"—a small but growing movemen t of people who deny that they are subjects of state or federal government. After several minutes of argument, the officer said, "sir I'm going to tell you one more time, I need your driver's license and proof of insurance, please. Otherwise I'm going to charge you with failure to identify. For about four minutes the two spar, with the officer repeating requests for identification. Richardson alleges he committed no crime. That doesn't stand up to the Texas transportation code , which allows government to enforce speed limits. He also claims the U. Supreme Court case Brown v. Texas established that law enforcement was not allowed to demand a citizen's identification unless he was seen committing a felony. This also is inaccurate—the case established that officers needed probable cause to detain and ID a citizen. Speeding qualifies as probable cause. When the argument proves futile, the officer smashes Richardson's window and removes him from the car. David Margulies, a spokesman for the Addison Police Department, said the officer was "absolutely" in the right so break the window. Richardson, who apparently posted the video to YouTube, could not be immediately reached for comment. He was arrested and charged with driving with an invalid license, having expired license plates and failing to present his driver's license upon demand. The officer issued a warning for the traffic violations. Most Popular Like summer camp for grown-ups: The pandemic is changing the digital Today's Picks. NASA's Perseverance has famous connection. I purchased the full set four months ago, but use only the brake control. I was about to give up on driving altogether until I decided to get this, even though it seemed a bit pricey. I'm glad I let desperation overrule tightfistedness. The engineering that went into the design is impressive in its simplicity, a big plus for a non-mechanically gifted nerd like myself. I do give myself credit for being patient enough to try it out on clear, flat terrain before doing city driving. Setting it up is as easy as other reviews have noted, and taking it off is even easier. It can be a bit tricky at night in my

Honda Fit switching the high beams on and off while pushing the brake handle in, but again practice is the key to building confidence. I'm 75 and won't be driving forever, but it's good to know I'm good to go. I've been driving with hand controls for more than 3 decades. This is one of the easier and reasonably priced hand controls that have been installed I did it myself or my dad before he passed away in my cars. I didn't want any problems. Thus I did it myself. Though it was easy to install, I still had to make some adjustments. The Velcro that wrapped around the steering column would easily slide down the steering column and get stuck a bit not a safety issue, more to prevent the Velcro from getting stuck in a bit of a crevice, since the newer steering columns was electronically adjustable and not anymore fixed with no crevices to slide down to. This was remedied by going to my nearest dollar store and getting some more Velcro which I stuck onto the steering column, and of which then one side clung on to the other Velcro thus preventing it from sliding down. This set up though is not push pull as was my last set up, but push push, basically just like "non handicapped" foot use, pushing on the accelerator on the right and pushing to brake on the left. Just use one hand akin to just use one foot ; So you do need to get accustomed to the system though if you have only used the push pull system only beforehand. Hope this is helpful. God bless. I had to have right ankle surgery and was going to be in a cast and walking boot for 12 weeks. As a mom of teenage boys, I had to be able to drive during that time. I contacted insurance and was told that I would be covered if I was involved in an accident using the hand controls. The hand controls gave me the freedom to continue with my normal activities without having to rely on others to constantly drive me where I needed to go. I would highly recommend them to anyone that has a right leg or foot injury, but still needs to be able to drive their car. Very easy to install and use. Practicing for an hour is needed to get the hang of the controls before venturing out into busy traffic. I definitely recommend these hand controls. My husband had an injury ro his foot. It's taking awhile to heal, so the doctor told him not to drive. He's been in a cast for a while, and may need surgery. It's so hard when you both work full-time and only one of you can drive. Trying to get and arrange rides was not always a hundred percent successful. So when we started looking for hand controls we almost fell over at the prices. These hand controls are very nice. They work well, and they're easy to put on, and were very reasonable in their price. Honestly I wish they would have been a little bit less, but compared to everybody else they were very reasonable. Luckily we have a van so it's not too bad space wise. If we had a compact car, it would really be hard with the big boot that my husband has to wear because he wouldn't have any leg room with these controls. He's quite tall. We are so grateful for these hand controls! A real godsend! Easy quick install for use with rental cars I travel a lot or for test drives. I have multiple vehicles 8 but only have "permanent" hand controls in two of them. For the others, I dont want to make modifications to them for permanent hand controls. As an active paraplegic, this works well for my needs for both home and travel. I have been using MPS brand hand controls for decades. The cert needs to state I am using the correct device and I am capable. Z gets a B-. The solid mounting of MPS is a big plus. If you need to grab it after say rolling up the window or flipping the turn signal you know exactly where it is. Also it will never get hung up on the steering wheel, clothing, etc. The solid mechanical aspect is just better and safer. While your hand is on the control your finger can flip the turn signal. At 6 o'clock for Z you need to take your hand completely off the control to use the turn signal. Another thing to consider is that the Z mounting brackets don't allow for standard safe use by valet or repair shops. It took a couple of months of use for me to feel safe with the Z although I'll never get to the M
